Consent

What do I need to know about cookies?

There are different types of cookies and they are used for different purposes.

Below you can read about what a cookie is, the difference between first and third party cookies and session cookies vs. persistent cookies and what types of cookies we use on our website and why.

What is a cookie?

A cookie is a small piece of data that a website stores on your device when you visit it and which is then read when you later revisit the site. The word "cookies" in this policy and the consent also refers to other forms of automatic collection of data, e.g. Flash-cookies (Local Shared Objects), Web Storage (HTML5), JavaScripts or cookies placed by other software.

A cookie may contain information about the website itself, a unique identifier that allows the site to recognize your web browser when you return to the website, additional data that serves the purpose of the cookie, and the lifespan of the cookie itself.

The word "cookies" or "cookie data" also covers information about IP and MAC addresses and other information about your device collected by said technologies.

Cookies can be used to enable certain features (e.g. logging in), to track site usage (e.g. analytics), to store your user settings (e.g. timezone, notification preferences), and to personalize your content (e.g. advertising, language).

Session cookies vs. persistent cookies

Session cookies only last as long as your browsing session. This means that they will disappear from your computer or device when you close your browser. They are therefore also sometimes referred to as temporary cookies. Typically, session cookies are used to remember what a user put in their basket when they are browsing a website.

Persistent cookies are sometimes called permanent cookies. They stay on your computer or device after you close your browser. These types of cookies will expire according to the time specified in the cookie. You can see the specific duration of each persistent cookie below.

What's the difference between first and third party cookies?

First party cookies are cookies that are set by the website that you are visiting and only this website that can access and read them.

Third party cookies are set by someone other than the website you're visiting. E.g., some pages have content from social media sites. Cookies set by other sites and companies (i.e. third parties) can be used to track you on other websites that use the same third-party service.

33reports.eu does not use third-party cookies.
